When the Great Tragedian Posted His The November Century contains some eminiscences of Edwin Booth, of which the following are of local interest:

At these times he was in his very bost mood, and would tell story after story of his life and adventures, and of his Rumor's busy tongue still makes up for the lack of news. About the silliest of all the street tales is that Mr. Willis will proceed to use force to-morrow, and that the Provisional Government will surrender as soon as the marines appear; whereupon Messrs. Dole and Damon will take office under the "Queen" with two Royalist Ministers. All this is told with great seriousness by the deluded adherents to the lost cause; but the notion will probably give way to quite another when the next mail comes from the Coast. Each day has its kaleidoscopic variety of gossip.

Nobody knows what Minister Willis' intentions are. His, communication the other day was not a demand but a request, which ended about as follows:

"And now, gentlemen of the Provisional Government, it is my duty most respectfully to ask of you, whether, setting aside all considerations of self-interest in behalf of honor, justice and duty, you will not now consent to retire from these positions which you hold, and surrender the Government to her to whom it has been decided rightfully to belong."
